It's official: the pizza is here. Wood Fired Pizza ovens from Gabardini Italy are finally being put into production. I've been hearing about this for some time and was really excited when I found out some of the details on the oven production line. They are using both induction coils and hot coils – both which generate the heat used in pizzerias to make the pizza with its characteristic higher temperature as the pizza cooks. The pizza oven will keep the pizza between 550° and 625°F – and most pizzerias like that perfect temperature. The installation of the pizza ovens is underway in Michigan with the final installation expected in this summer. The growth of the pizza restaurant industry is still very strong. It is possible that instead of constantly monitoring the internal temperature of the ovens, people could simply remove the stone and use a wireless probe to check the temperature inside the oven. These pizza ovens seem to offer great quality pizza and for a good price, so the upside is high. While I'm waiting for the pizza ovens to arrive, I'm going to post some of my favorite pizza recipes. First, there's a classic recipe for pizza dough:Synopsis for Silent Hill Origins Kenji Yamamoto runs a company that carries weapons to people all over the world, and was also responsible for developing the first live-action and animated Silent Hill film. Players start off by navigating through the area, picking up documents that will open up different conversations about the Silent Hill series.
