Functionalized helical oligo(phenylenevinylene)s: synthesis, conformation, and fluorescence. Four new derivatives of helical oligo(phenylenevinylene)s, containing heterocyclic units at both extremities, were prepared. Chiral recognition properties in self-assembled nanoparticles and their fluorescence properties were investigated. Low-temperature CD and NMR measurements demonstrate the right-handed handedness in the helical conformation of the studied oligo(phenylenevinylene)s. The chiroptical studies indicate that the geometry of the cyclic two-dimensional array of the polymer depends on the length and nature of the appended asymmetric constituents. The results indicate that the equilibrium chirality of the oligo(phenylenevinylene) is controlled by noncovalent interactions, while the length of the lateral appendices influences the topology of the supramolecular assembly that could be controlled by changing the kind of lateral appendices. The chiroptical properties of two new compounds indicate that the oligo(phenylenevinylene)s can be used as medium for the enantioresolution of chiral molecules. The chiroptical properties of the compounds are hardly affected by solvents, while strong solvent dependence is observed in the fluorescence properties. The latter properties indicate that the oligo(phenylenevinylene)s exhibit all-phenyl fluorescence.
