Libro de Berlitz (Libro de Diccionario.Q: Using streaming REST APIs in Scala I've been looking for a good way to stream the results of a REST API in Scala. I did find a few ways. The two that I found seem to do something similar, but are not the same. In the first solution, you subscribe to the REST api and keep the results in memory for the duration of the subscriber. In the second solution, you subscribe to the REST api and get the results in a streaming manner. The first solution (which I think is what I'm looking for) seems to lose the benefits of a REST api, like being able to use other APIs in a RESTful manner. The second solution seems to retain the benefits, but seems to use a lot of threading. Has anyone had to use this? The API doesn't give you a way to specify your own callback. That
